NOTES:

First, divide your class into two teams. Then, have two students (one from each team) come to the front of the class and randomly select one of the 'Charade' cards (these should be cut up before the class begins).

Each of the two students should act out the activity (without saying anything) according to his/her card. For example, if the card says 'play tennis', the student must pretend to play tennis while (at the same time) the other student might pretend to go fishing.

Award one point to the team that correctly guesses the activity (of their own teammate) first – encourage all the students from both teams to shout aloud their guesses (but to be awarded a point, the team must say, for example, play tennis, and not just 'tennis').

Finally, replace the students at the front of the class with a different student and repeat the above process several times until all the cards have been used.

Teammates:

"Are you playing tennis?"

Student at front of the class:

"Yes, I am!" OR "No, I'm not!"
